CHARLIE

“It wouldn't need a genius to rumble this little game!”

2023

Variable dimensions, picnic tables, pen on paper, stone, bread, rubber, clay

Text fragment adapted from J. Lindsay's novel Picnic at Hanging Rock, 1967

“Charlie” is an exquisite corpse. Following the rules of the Surrealist exercise, a piece of paper was folded into five equal parts and then passed onto Nienke Fransen, Julien Jonas, Laura de Jaeger, Francisco Correia and Thomas Sadée. Each of them wrote a paragraph only knowing the mandatory word “Charlie”, and the end of the previous writer’s sentence. Afterwards, the exercise was repeated in its most famous format of a distorted body. For Les Brasseurs, the group proposes a third moment wherein the system of an exquisite corpse is applied to the architecture. Therefore, the exhibition space is once again divided into five rigid sections within which each artist intervenes with complete freedom.

The starting point of the works is the centre of the body and its objects of leisure time. The blue and white neons are based on drawings of hip movement inside the circle of a hula-hoop. As wall pieces, they mark the edges of a space, whereas in the middle, a herd of pic-nic tables invite the viewer to crouch down and rest. Crammed together and with the help of their content, they are inspired by the non-stop inner workings of our body, with tubes and matter, flowing, stretching and working continuously.

up like a flower into the brilliant sky above Hanging Rock. The shadow of the rock is flowing, luminous as water, across the shimmering plains and they are there, sitting on the warm, dry grass under the gum trees.

The works depart from the infrastructure of commuting. Exhausting representations of circularity, I wonder about repetition, patterns, time, and habit. It's rush hour on the train and Kehä III around Helsinki. A retired maintenance worker of a local race track thinks back about his daily rhythm.

Summer, Set, Save

Towel, washline, 2 pegs, 2 happenings, 6 x 10 cm sticker

Summer Set Save lures the gallery into a break. The exhibition inaugurates the season with a swim in the Baltic sea. An extra washline is placed next to the vitrine where visitors can hang their towels to dry. The exhibited towel behind the glass reads the hand sewn sentence 'Lean, lay, lounge'. Towards the end of the summer, the glass of the gallery box gets broken and an unknown visitor steals the towel, marking the end of the season.

Brought to existence in function of their own sleeper, two beds of long distance travelers find themselves in dialog. They share impressions of surroundings, time passing and their companions' resting rhythms.

A second, starts and continues. I might as well go back to a cold autumn 4 years ago, when this basement project room, that might soon move or be renovated, was not anymore EKA Galerii, and not yet Vent Space. Back then, I covered the floor with approximately 1 ton of salt, and afterwards it wouldn't stop peeling off. Moved by this place and its characteristics, the following interventions are a proposal for motion, airing out, wrapping up. From floor to ceiling, they are the outcome of a material stream of consciousness, a flux of thought and sensations poured into gestures, where the next sprung from the last one. The site specific installation proposes the space as a body, filled with pipes.

Concrete, scan of pinhole photography negatives

During my residency at Copper Leg, I departed from tables and chairs found in the main hall of the old schoolhouse. Standardized primary school tables accompany round, foldable models, perfectly suitable for the current meetings in the community center. Both tabletops were poured in concrete and escaped the building, moving around the garden. A gathering of pinhole photos could serve as proof of ghosts of legs, at night, running. The work uses fiction to imagine potential futures for objects after their functionality.

My feet are pushing, I'm holding up

Plastic ready made (pizza saver), metal lamp feet, felt, ceramics

For the 130th edition of the Sint Lukas library vitrine, I raised the bottom of it and let a pizza box holder carry the glass. The holder, resembling a simple, minimalistic table, received golden feet from my continuous growing collection of kitschy, ornamental lamps. The weight of the glass shows in its feet, pushing their shape in the carpet. Further in the library, one of the tables grew feet as well. The work reflects on our relationship to objects by the means of language; a constant comparison through relating to parts of our body.

Monument, walk, stone, scan, scan again, print. film. Language. Serbian architect Bojana Rankovic was invited for a verbal walk through a new landscape, derived from a process of 3D-scanning stones, gathered on walks towards former-Yugoslav monuments. Her voice roams over the pathway as personal fragments, impressions and fluctuating thoughts. "current echoes" is a process of abstraction and subtraction. The work is inspired by an urge for lightness and transformative potential in commemorating practices.

A catfish is stranded by a river with an old socket. Both relating to the idea of energy from a different time and direction, an odd yet familiar reunion takes place. Together on the verge of becoming inutile, they share the same place and time, lay, talk. About anything and nothing at all.

Oh, time. Is it because of your other?

Will you please?

A pillar of the space, PVC, PU foam, paper and spray paint

For an exhibition visible from 2 perspectives - through a window and online - I build a pillar. This mirrors an older version which was partly covered up by a wall. The sculpture discovers the past of the place, layers of time, while creating a new, possible division. The pillar is only half full, which visitors are able to notice when visiting the second viewpoint of the exhibition online. The intervention plays with visual triggers and reflects on the limits of perception - needing only half material, half imagination built up in the past.

69450mm thread (house), 17250mm thread (room), spool made from Kopli Liinid soil

Two spools are a document of a speculative act of preservation. While treating the Baltic harbor community as a terrain vague, I measured the soon to be demolished house and its purple room. The medium was sewing thread, in order to capture its potential of movement and transformation, containing in this way countless possibilities to be stored and laid open in new spatial structures. The carrier of these measurements is a spool made out of the clay of the site itself, which was dug up by the construction works.
